Plan to attend the inaugural UC–wide Leadership Development Conference. With a theme of “Paths to Leadership Excellence and Inclusion,” this day-long course features a keynote address by the chief officer for Scientific Workforce Diversity at the National Institutes of Health, plus engaging Ted-type talks and a variety of skill sessions and opportunities for networking.

Intended Audience
This course is designed for all UC Health System Faculty at all ranks (Assistant, Associate and Professors), Staff Assembly Representatives and AMWA Chapter Presidents. Participants with an interest in leadership, mentoring and diversity, as well as early career faculty considering a future leadership position and wanting to learn about paths to leadership will benefit the most from this program.

Course Description
This conference is aligned with UC's commitment to empower faculty for lifelong learning and to develop the next generation of leaders in biomedical sciences. By bringing together a diverse mix of faculty and students and through the conference theme of promoting paths to leadership and inclusion excellence, we will:
- Showcase exemplary leaders who will share their paths to success and lessons learned
- Address how to best foster paths to leadership for women in the biomedical academic pipeline
- Demonstrate successful mentorship teams and the diversity of mentoring in different disciplines
- Provide opportunities for personal and professional development skill building focused on time management and technological innovations
- Address the growing issue of work-life integration, maintaining resilience, building successful teams, and raising your visibility
- Inspire and engage our future talent to become future leaders in academic medicine
